1. About TechNova

TechNova Solutions Pvt. Ltd. is a fictional technology company used for training demonstrations. The company develops enterprise software, data platforms, AI solutions, and cloud-based applications for business customers.

Mission: Build practical technology that helps organizations make faster, safer, and better decisions.

Values: Customer focus, ownership, learning, integrity, collaboration, and responsible use of technology.

Employees are expected to understand that policies are intended to create consistent expectations while allowing managers to make reasonable operational decisions.

2. Employment Categories and Probation

Employees may be classified as permanent employees, fixed-term employees, interns, trainees, consultants, or contractors depending on the engagement letter.

New permanent employees normally complete a six-month probation period. During probation, managers provide feedback on technical performance, communication, attendance, teamwork, learning ability, and role fit.

At the end of probation, the employee may be confirmed, have probation extended, or be separated according to the employment agreement and applicable requirements.

Employees must keep HR informed about changes to contact information, emergency contacts, bank details, and other records required for employment administration.

3. Working Hours and Attendance

Standard office hours are Monday to Friday, 9:30 AM to 6:30 PM, with a one-hour meal break. Certain customer-facing or support teams may follow different schedules communicated by their department.

Employees are expected to record attendance using the approved HR attendance system. Missing attendance records should be corrected through the prescribed regularization process.

Repeated late arrival, unexplained absence, or failure to communicate schedule changes may lead to a discussion with the manager and, where appropriate, corrective action.

Employees working remotely must remain reachable during agreed core collaboration hours and must attend required meetings unless an exception has been approved.

Managers are responsible for setting reasonable expectations and avoiding unnecessary meetings outside normal working hours.

4. Leave and Time-Off Policy

TechNova provides leave categories according to its internal policy and applicable requirements. For this fictional handbook, employees receive 12 Casual Leave days and 15 Earned Leave days per calendar year.

Casual Leave is intended for short personal needs and should normally be requested in advance. Earned Leave may be used for planned vacations or extended personal requirements and should be requested early enough for team planning.

Sick leave may be requested when an employee is unwell. For extended absence, HR may request appropriate supporting documentation consistent with company procedures.

Leave requests should be submitted through the HR portal. Approval depends on available balance, business requirements, team coverage, and applicable rules.

Employees should not assume that silence from a manager constitutes approval. The approved leave record should be checked before the employee remains absent.

Unused leave treatment, carry-forward, encashment, and statutory leave categories are governed by the applicable company rules and law.

5. Hybrid and Work-From-Home Policy

Hybrid work may be available to roles that can be performed effectively away from the office. Eligibility depends on job responsibilities, information-security requirements, performance, business needs, and manager approval.

The default training scenario for TechNova is three office days and two remote days per week. Individual teams may adopt different schedules when business requirements justify the change.

Employees working from home must maintain a professional workspace, reliable internet connection, appropriate privacy, and availability during agreed working hours.

Company data must be accessed only through approved accounts, systems, devices, and security controls. Employees must not upload confidential company documents to personal storage or messaging accounts.

WFH is not a substitute for leave. If an employee is unable to work because of illness or another approved reason, the employee should use the appropriate leave or absence process.

Managers may request office attendance for client meetings, training, onboarding, project needs, equipment checks, or other legitimate business requirements.

6. Code of Conduct

Employees must treat colleagues, customers, vendors, and visitors professionally and respectfully.

Employees must avoid conflicts of interest and disclose situations where personal interests could influence business decisions.

Company assets, credentials, systems, software licenses, and intellectual property must be used responsibly and primarily for authorized business purposes.

Employees must not falsify records, manipulate attendance, misuse company funds, disclose confidential information, or intentionally interfere with another employee's work.

Business gifts and hospitality must be reasonable, transparent, and consistent with company approval requirements. Employees must never offer or accept benefits intended to improperly influence a business decision.

Employees using social media should not disclose confidential company or customer information or represent personal opinions as official company statements unless authorized.

7. Information Security and Acceptable Use

Employees must use strong passwords and multi-factor authentication where provided. Passwords must not be shared with colleagues or stored in unsecured documents.

Company laptops must be protected from unauthorized access. Employees should lock their screens when away and report lost or stolen devices immediately.

Software must be installed only through approved channels. Employees must not bypass security controls, disable endpoint protection, or install unauthorized tools that create security risk.

Phishing emails, suspicious links, unexpected login notifications, malware warnings, accidental data disclosure, or suspected account compromise must be reported promptly to the IT Security team.

Confidential customer data must not be copied to personal USB drives, personal cloud storage, public repositories, or personal email.

Use of generative AI tools must follow company data-classification rules. Confidential, personal, customer, source-code, or restricted information must not be entered into an AI service unless the service and use case have been approved.

8. Data Privacy and Confidential Information

Employees may have access to employee, customer, partner, and business information. Access must be limited to what is necessary for the employee's role.

Personal information should be collected, stored, processed, and shared only for legitimate business purposes and through approved systems.

Employees must verify recipients before sending sensitive information. When practical, sensitive files should use approved access controls or encryption.

Confidential information includes source code, credentials, customer records, pricing information, business plans, internal reports, product roadmaps, security information, and non-public financial information.

Confidentiality obligations continue after an employee leaves the organization, subject to the employee's agreement and applicable law.

9. Performance Management

Performance reviews are conducted twice each year in this fictional scenario, with regular manager check-ins during the year.

Performance may be evaluated using delivery quality, technical capability, customer impact, teamwork, communication, reliability, learning progress, and achievement of agreed goals.

The sample rating scale is: Exceptional, Exceeds Expectations, Meets Expectations, Partially Meets Expectations, and Does Not Meet Expectations.

Employees receiving a sustained below-expectation assessment may enter a Performance Improvement Plan (PIP). A PIP normally defines performance gaps, measurable goals, support available, review dates, and expected outcomes.

Performance feedback should be specific, evidence-based, and focused on improvement rather than personal criticism.

10. Learning and Development

TechNova encourages employees to improve technical and professional skills through internal workshops, external courses, certifications, mentoring, documentation, and project-based learning.

Employees may request learning support when the proposed training is relevant to their role or an agreed development plan.

Managers should discuss development goals during performance conversations and help employees identify practical opportunities to apply new skills.

Employees participating in sponsored training are expected to complete required assignments and share useful learning with their teams where appropriate.

11. Travel and Expense Reimbursement

Business travel requires prior approval from the appropriate manager. Employees should use approved travel channels where available.

Reasonable business expenses may be reimbursed when supported by valid receipts and submitted within the required expense-reporting period.

Examples of potentially reimbursable expenses include approved transportation, accommodation, meals within applicable limits, and client-related business expenses.

Personal entertainment, fines, unauthorized upgrades, and expenses unrelated to business activities are normally not reimbursable.

Employees should choose reasonably priced options and avoid unnecessary expenses even when a category is technically reimbursable.

12. Workplace Health, Safety and Well-being

Employees should maintain a safe and professional workplace and promptly report hazards, accidents, or unsafe conditions.

Remote employees should maintain a reasonably safe workspace and take regular breaks from prolonged computer use.

Managers should encourage sustainable workloads, clear priorities, and early communication when workload or well-being concerns could affect performance.

Emergency procedures, building evacuation instructions, and first-aid arrangements must be followed at office locations.

13. Anti-Harassment and POSH

TechNova expects a workplace free from harassment, intimidation, discrimination, and inappropriate conduct.

Sexual harassment includes unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature, whether verbal, physical, visual, written, or communicated through digital channels.

Employees may report concerns through the designated Internal Committee or HR channels. Reports should be handled with appropriate confidentiality and procedural fairness.

Retaliation against a person who raises a good-faith concern or participates in an investigation is prohibited.

This fictional section is for training only; organizations must maintain a policy and process appropriate to applicable law and their actual circumstances.

14. Grievance and Whistleblower Process

Employees are encouraged to raise workplace concerns early with their manager or HR when appropriate.

For concerns involving the manager, employees may approach HR or another designated escalation channel.

Good-faith reports concerning fraud, serious misconduct, security issues, corruption, retaliation, or material policy violations may be submitted through the whistleblower channel.

Reports should contain enough factual information to allow the company to assess the concern. Deliberately false allegations may themselves be treated as misconduct.

15. Disciplinary Process

Policy violations may result in coaching, a documented warning, a corrective action plan, suspension of specific privileges, or further disciplinary action depending on severity and applicable requirements.

Serious matters such as deliberate data theft, fraud, violence, severe harassment, intentional security compromise, or major confidentiality breaches may require immediate escalation.

Employees should be given an opportunity to provide relevant facts before a final decision where the applicable process requires it.

Disciplinary outcomes depend on the facts, evidence, severity, prior history, and applicable company procedures.

16. Separation and Exit

Employees resigning from TechNova should submit resignation through the prescribed process and serve the notice period stated in their employment agreement unless otherwise approved.

During notice, employees are expected to complete handover activities, document work, return company assets, and support knowledge transfer.

Before the last working day, employees should return laptops, access cards, equipment, documents, and other company property.

System access may be removed as part of the exit process. Final settlement and employment documents are processed according to the company's procedures and applicable requirements.
